Dr Kent Woo

Dr Woo graduated from Jefferson Medical College of Thomas Jefferson University, Philadelphia. After receiving his MD degree; he obtained his Internal Medicine residency training at Eastern Virginia Medical School where he was nominated by his peers to serve as Chief Resident of Internal Medicine. He was then appointed as Assistant Professor of Medicine and started the academic hospitalist program at Norfolk General Hospital.

After the academic hospitalist program became a success, Dr. Woo pursued further subspecialty training in the field of Allergy and Immunology. He became a fellow in training at Louisiana State University under the mentorship of Dr. Sami Bahna, an internationally recognized figure in food allergy and past president of the American College of Allergy, Asthma and Immunology. Upon completion of his fellowship training, Dr. Woo worked as an Allergist in Allergy & Asthma Care Centers in Northern Virginia. There, he played an integral role in developing their state-of-the-art immunotherapy program.
